

Reflective Essay

Human life is full of events and, consequently, personal experience. In fact, as the time passes by, the amount of these events is increasing and human's personal experience is becoming more affluent thus a person is able to make an important decision based on this ample experience. However, events in human's life can be classified as positive and negative. Moreover, one and the same event can be treated as positive or negative depending on personal perception of different people. Also, the entire range of events can be divided into two groups of events: ordinary events, and fateful events. Each person receives an invaluable experience in the process of life and bygone events.

In fact, each event has a deeper meaning. The main task is to see this deeper meaning. Obviously, nothing happens just like that. For example, some person studies at university in concrete group and meets a lot of people, which are his or her classmates. So, studying in concrete group and meeting with concrete humans can be considered as an important event. However, this event has its own deeper meaning, since this person probably would never meet his or her own classmates, if he or she chose another university or another specialty. Each human meets a lot of people every day, some of these meetings are accidental, while others are fateful. That is why, such event as studying at concrete university can be considered as a fateful event, which is very important for further future. So, many people ask the following question: was it accidentally or was it a destiny? This question is rhetorical, but one thing is obvious. Some person's life would be changed, if he or she made another choice. That is why, this event can be considered as an event with a very deep meaning.

To conclude, in the process of life each person gain experience due to the bygone events. That is why, people should consider these events as very important for further life.